Power Development

HE ALABAMA FARMER is directly interested in the development and utilization of power, for power is the key to industrial development, and industiral development is of vital importance to agricultural prosperity.

An average of 3.41 horsepower of electricity is employed by each worker in America, according to the U.S. Census of Manufactures, 1925.

An industry in Alabama with 100 workers must have approximately 325 horsepower of electricity to turn its wheels.

Every time 31/4 horsepower of additional electric power is utilized by a new or existing enterprise in Alabama, a new job is created, paying wages with which to buy products from the farmer, and others.

An average of 40c out of every $1 of family income in Huntsville, Ala., is expended for food products, according to statistics of the U.S. Department of Labor. Thirty cents out of every dollar goes for foods that are or could be grown in Ala-

Thus power development means new payrolls, and new payrolls mean new markets for farm products.

It is therefore in the direct interest of the Alabama farmer that such power be made available as Alabama may need for its continued industrialization.
